ARTISTS STATEMENT

The conceptual artist Andy Kassier (*1989) lives and works in Berlin. His work includes installations, performances, photography, videos, sculptures and painting. In 2018, he graduated with distinction in Media Arts from the Academy of Media Arts Cologne, where he studied with Mischa Kuball and Johannes Wohnseifer, among others.

In 2013, he created his alter ego Andy Kassier, who ironically breaks the narrative of wealth and happiness in late capitalist society. On Instagram and in international solo and group exhibitions, he continuously develops the long-term performance according to the current zeitgeist. How does photography change in the digital age, when images become the medium of communication and at the same time the medium of photography is expanded through performances and livestreams? In exhibition spaces, Kassier sets up installations and performs and streams live on social media.

Kassier observes phenomena in social media and the development of digital image cultures. Based on his findings, he searches in his artistic work for answers to currently socially relevant questions: What is happiness? ("the science of happiness", Pop; 68, Cologne, 2016) How do I become successful? ("On the Internet, Nobody Knows You're a Performance Artist. Andy Kassier and Signe Pierce", NRW-Forum Düsseldorf, 2018) How is masculinity portrayed? ("How To Take A Selfie", Goethe-Zentrum Baku, Azerbaijan, 2019) How do I accept myself? ("Link in Bio. Art After Social Media", Museum der bildenden Künste Leipzig, 2019/2020) What is the role of the artist in the digital age? ("palm down", HANZ.studio, Gallery Weekend Berlin, 2020)

PORTFOLIO

SUCCESS IS JUST A SMILE AWAY

Artists follow the zeitgeist on Instagram. Their concepts and critical interventions change along with the social developments they reflect upon. Under the programmatic title “success is just a smile away,” German conceptual artist Andy Kassier tells the story of a self-made man driven by money and success. In this long-term performance on Instagram, Kassier’s character always shows up where the sun is shining and it is raining money. His hair is perfectly coiffed, a smile is attached to his face, and his shoes and cars are gleaming. He is never at a loss for a motivational quote that is supposed to help you achieve happiness and success. “Taking risks and succeeding make you a winning player. Never forget that you could have become a tree instead of a human being. So be happy every second of your life. Just be yourself.” Kassier’s character is the personification of the false promise that money, power, and a carefree life are within reach for everyone. He combines critique with a sympathetic attitude towards a generation that always aims farther and higher, wants to get there ever faster, and chooses #nevernot-working as its mantra even though its jobs often remain somewhat intangible.

TIME TO REFLECT

However, in the process the successful business man Andy Kassier overworked himself. In spring 2019, a burnout drove him into the sea and he disappeared for half a year. Now he—and his character—are practicing self-love and self-care. He no longer lives on the fast lane. Still high above the ground, of course, he now sits on a swing in the midst of nature. “A stable job is a sign of weakness,” he once claimed. Today, he is on a path of self-discovery through yoga and meditation. With the help of alternative healing methods, he hopes to recalibrate his work-life balance. He takes time off to pause and think about things. His mirror reminds him: “time to reflect.” Kassier lives in the here and now. Art allows him to maintain a mental equilibrium.

HOW TO TAKE A SELFIE

Andy Kassier reflects on how male individuals represent themselves in the digital age. Do men today want to be seen as strong, soft, successful or emotional? Are muscles necessary for a man to be perceived as male? Which outfit gives a man social approval?

Media and advertising today are in search of the new man, while at the same time toxic masculinity is discussed as a problematic and outdated concept: men want to be strong, they show no weakness. Men should be tough, they show no feelings.

"How to Take a Selfie" is a collection of re-staged status updates from Facebook and Instagram. Andy Kassier presents a variety of male images as he found them online. Young men test gender roles in social media. Sometimes they flex their muscles to create a strong physical presence. Sometimes they stand in nature with a challenging look to present themselves as adventurers. The demonstration of strength, power and potency shape the image of men in the age of self-optimization.

andykassier Looking beautiful isn't just about what you apply on your face. It's the little things you do that matter. A combination of a good diet, exercise, healthy habits, discipline, fun etc. is what my beauty routine consists of. Also, I have no bad habits; I don't drink or smoke. All these contribute to me being fit and looking good. I always say that kindness is the greatest beauty that you can have.

andykassier I was raised as an upper-class WASP in New England, and there was this old tradition there that everyone would simply be guided into the right way after Ivy League college and onward and upward. And it rejected me, I rejected it, and I ended up as a kind of refugee, really.

But: Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through.

andykassier SKATE LOVE ❤️🔥🇺🇸

What takes you away from committing to something?

For most people, it's fear. Whether it be starting a business or doing a skate tricks. It's fear that holds them back. They think "oh the economy might crash and I'll lose my money" or "I could roll my ankle or sprain my wrist kickflipping off of this".

Thoughts like that are what kill success and I'm not blameless for this. I always get scared of committing to things like you saw at the beginning of this post. I was afraid to run a business because I thought I couldn't handle it and I thought I would fail
